June 27, 2010 Thirteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

1 Kings 19:16, 19-21 • Psalm 16:1-2, 5, 7-11 • Galatians 5:1, 13-18 •
Luke 9:51-62

"Liberté, égalité, fraternité" – Liberty, equality, fraternity: this was the motto of the French Revolution in 1789. These terms depend upon each other. The concept of equality is the fruit of the period of Enlightenment, but it has its roots also in the Bible. In the letter to the Galatians we just heard, Paul speaks about equality: "There are no more distinctions between Jew and Greek, slave and free, male and female, but all of you are one in Christ Jesus". Something new had come into being: the common faith and the life in one Christian community was meant to abolish hierarchical orders. Each and every one in this community is wished and created by God. All have the same dignity before God.

We Christians are convinced that God is a friend of life and that God wants the happiness of all. All are invited to reach the fulfillment of our lives, to become what and who each and everyone is meant to be. We are convinced that all human beings have been drawn nearer to God through the cross and resurrection of Jesus Christ. We say we are redeemed: we do not need to seek redemption ourselves, but redemption is offered to us. Paul says: "All of you are one in Christ Jesus." This is not something very spiritual, but something very concrete: we form the body of Christ here in our world, and we belong to this body by our baptism. We are linked to Christ, and we are also linked to each other. So within the Christian community we are equal.

Does this mean that those who are not within the Church are less equal? What about Jews and the so-called pagans? It is absolutely clear that they also can reach the fulfillment of their lives. And what is true for us Christians is true also for them: they can reach the fulfillment of their lives not out of their own effort, but because God wants it, because God loves all human beings with the same love.
