Peaks of Light – Valleys of Darkness

Life is not linear. We all experience ups and downs, peaks of light and valleys of doubt and darkness. This is true also for the life of Jesus, as he was fully human “in all things but sin”, as the letter to the Hebrews says. The Gospels mention three spiritual “peak” moments when Jesus experienced very strongly the presence and intimate closeness of His Father, His “Abba”.

The first occurred at the age of twelve, at the turning point from childhood to adulthood. During his first pilgrimage to the Temple in Jerusalem, he was so deeply touched by God that he wanted to stay in the house of his Father and forgot all about his parents. The second moment was Jesus' baptism. He “saw the heavens opened” and “the Spirit came to rest on him” to empower him for his mission. The transfiguration on Mt. Tabor is the third time: Jesus is drawn so closely to God that even his body is transformed and he experiences a foretaste of the resurrection. What is common to all three moments of enlightenment is that they do not last, but are followed by a time of testing, a spiritual crisis. After the baptism he is “lead by the Spirit” into the desert, the place of hardship and the territory of evil spirits. At a moment of hunger, weakness and exhaustion the devil tries to pull Jesus away from his true mission with the same kind of temptations that we face, often silencing the voice of our conscience: the pursuit of a life of leisure and pleasure, of popularity and fame (giving in to peer pressure), and of power to further our own interests at the expense of others. Jesus resists and Satan “left him to return at the appointed time” which is the time of his suffering and death. But before Jesus enters his last temptation the Father gives Him this extraordinary moment on Mt. Tabor, a foretaste of the glory that awaits him. In the strength of this experience Jesus continues to trust God's word even when all abandon him and even his “Abba” seems absent.

During Lent we could take some time to recall the peak moments of our life when we had an experience of God's presence, of his peace, of his light. This gives us the strength to stand firm when doubt and darkness seem to overwhelm us. What happens in the life of Jesus and in our personal lives is also a pattern of the history of humankind. There are times of peace, prosperity and progress and there are times when the order of the world is shaken. Jesus' experience, and maybe also our own, assures us that God is always at work and eventually turns evil into good.
