The First Sunday of Lent

(Genesis 9:8-15; Psalm 25; 1Peter 3:18-22; Mark 1:12-15)

As we begin our Lenten preparation for the celebration of Easter we are reminded of the reason behind this penitential time. We are reminded of the covenants God made with his people, of how the people broke those covenants and of how God then sought to destroy them and begin creation afresh. Nevertheless, we are also told that God will no longer destroy those who break his covenant because he has sent us the means to be saved from our sins and from death, but only if we believe.

In the first reading we see God talking with Noah after the great flood has receded. The flood was God's way of removing sinful humans from the earth and restarting or renewing his creation to its original state of purity and it was clear in this episode that it was humans who brought sin into creation. However, God has realized that humans are a species prone to go wrong and so he tells Noah that he will never again seek to destroy the human race even if they break the covenant which he makes with Noah and which is to last throughout the generations. The sign of the covenant and God's promise not to destroy the peoples is the rainbow in the sky.

Our second reading comes from St. Peter and at the time he was writing there was a belief in Judaism that evil spirits had brought sin into the world at the time of the flood and that the flood saved Noah from this contamination. Peter takes this idea and says that the saving of Noah by water is similar to our being baptized with water because, at baptism, the soul is washed clean and original sin is removed. Peter also attests to the death of Jesus Christ as something which leads us to God through his resurrection from the dead.

We read very briefly in St. Mark's Gospel of Jesus' temptations in the wilderness after his baptism and how he did not succumb to Satan's promises. Mark doesn't give us the detail of the temptations, as do the other evangelists, because Mark sees Jesus as being tempted throughout the Gospel but that he never gave in to those temptations. After this episode and the arrest of his cousin, John the Baptist, Jesus begins preaching repentance for the sake of the Kingdom because that is the way we enter heaven – through repentance we renew our souls and make ourselves acceptable for the heavenly court. We know that what awaits us is a much greater promise than awaited Noah and so we should use this time well by examining our own life and making sure that it is in keeping with the covenant.
